

Marital Name Changes

Marriage has traditionally been a time when women take their husband's family name. In recent times this tradition has been altered with some women keeping their own family name, or by couples adopting a hyphenated name such as Smith-Jones. A few couples have chosen to adopt a new family name, or the husband has taken the wife's last name. Here are the answers to frequently asked questions about marital name changes.

How do I change my name by marriage?

Minnesota Statute 517.08 subd. 1a. (9) requires that the application for a marriage license list the full names the bride and groom will use after the marriage. You change your name by listing your new name on the license application. When the marriage license is issued by the county it will show the name change, but the change does not take effect until the time of marriage. Special conditions apply if an applicant has a felony conviction.

Can both the Bride and Groom change their names?

The wording of Minnesota Statute 517.08 subd. 1a. (9) has been interpreted differently in each county in the Twin City area. Some counties, only allow the couple to adopt one or both of their two last names. Some counties, including Anoka, Ramsey, and Washington County, allow a couple to choose an altogether different name. Before you buy your marriage license in a county be sure that your choice of names is acceptable. A marriage license can be purchased in any county in Minnesota and the ceremony can then be performed anywhere in the State. Shop around until your proposed name change is acceptable; and then purchase your license in that county.

How do I prove that my name has been changed?

On the day of your marriage ceremony, The Officiant may give you one or two signed copies of the marriage certificate – or the Officiant may only have the original and take that with him to be filed. It depends on which county from which you purchased your marriage license.

On August 1st 2009, the law changed as to marriage certificates. Before that date, there were an original and two copies of the certificate of marriage. These uncertified "souvenir" copies were really duplicate originals. All three would be signed and the blanks filled in. The Officiant would take the original and leave the two. After August 1st 2009, the law only requires the County to issue an original certificate – with no copies. Some Counties are still issuing the original and two copies, and some only one copy, and most Counties are issuing only the original.

After the marriage ceremony the Officiant is required to mail or deliver the original signed marriage certificate to the county from which it was purchased. Approximately two to three weeks after the date of marriage, the county will mail a certified copy of the marriage certificate to the address listed on the application. This certified copy has a certification stamp and a raised seal. You can obtain additional certified copies at any time from any county in Minnesota for a fee. A certified copy is all that is legally required as proof of your marriage and your new name.
